run. The $2 mutuel tickets on Bir Barton paid $7.20.

The race was truly run and the best horse won beyond all question. However, Sir Barton was in receipt of a weive pound maiden allowance, which favored him materially in the heavy going. Sir Barton is the dirst maiden to win the Kentucky Derby.

Eternal, chief reliance of J. W. Mcclelland, kept close pace with the winner for the first seven furlongs, but then began dropping back. It was plain to be seen that he was not a mud runner. At the finish he was tenth. Vindex, the much touted Whitney representative, was another horse which could not untrack himself in the heavy going, finishing a badly blown last. Vulcantic was fourth. The time for the mile and a quarter was 2:09 4-5. It was 62-5 seconds slower than the record, but it was a good performance for the heavy going. The case with which Sir Barton won will be a strong argument against excessive allowances in future Derbles.

The discontinuance of the free field was not in the least noticeable, for the overflow from the grand stand, lawns ond clubhouse and other paid sections of the course poured across the track to occupy the benches that were arranged at vantage points opposite the grand stand.

There seemed more animation and orilllancy to the Derby scene of this sea son than to that of former runnings of the classic.

Persons prominent in the country's social sphere, public life and financial circles were more abundantly in evidence.

The betting shed was a seething jam, and although eighty-three pari-mutuel machines were in use for speculation, at times it seemed as if they would be inadequate for the accommodation of the patrons of the course.
